

'One Greenway' to break ground

By Chris Cassidy

June 27, 2013

A pair of apartment and condo buildings on the border between Chinatown and the Rose Kennedy Greenway — a project expected to break ground next month — will be called "One Greenway," developers said yesterday.

The 362-unit residential project at Kneeland and Hudson streets includes a 312-apartment North Building and 50-unit affordable condo South Building with green space in the middle.

"It's helping to reconnect Chinatown with the Leather District," said Sean Sacks of New Boston Fund.

The project also will include a 137-space garage and 10,000 square feet of retail and community space.

"I don't think demand for housing in the downtown has ever been greater," said Sacks.